The FOOL. No. 651.

AS induſtry is the ſource of wealth, ſo is it the intereſt of all governments to promote and encourage it, if it was only for the ſake of that peace and harmony amongſt men, which tends ſo eſſentially to the eaſe of thoſe who govern, and produces ſo many benefits to a community. Where induſtry is univerſal, we behold none of thoſe calamitous proſpects which daily preſent themſelves to our view in this great metropolis. Connivance at idleneſs is equally an error in government, as encouraging it, becauſe the event is much the ſame; and we call that incolence in a ſtate, which contributes not by good laws, well executed, to make the idle active.

There are two kinds of poor in every ſtate not regularly and attentively governed; theſe are the labouring and the lazy: In the firſt caſe, every wiſe and ſkilful means ought to be uſed to procure buſineſs for them, as an honeſt, innocent people, whoſe hands are of more uſe to them than their heads; therefore ſuch as have better heads ſhould find work for their hands, otherwiſe they will fall gradually into the rank of the lazy poor.

The lazy poor are of two kinds, thieves and beggars: The firſt are active on a different principle from the labouring, and fall under the ſeverity of the law for taking more pains to be wicked, than the other to be honeſt.

The begging poor have, under the laxneſs of our laws, much the advantage of the others; as by the appearance of imploring your pity, they with the aid of rueful countenance, rob you by your own conſent, and live jovially on the perquiſites of tender error. Theſe people can calculate within a few ſhillings what every day's earning will amount to, according to the ſeaſon of the year, and the reſpective ſtations they aſſign themſelves; and often make more in ſix hours than an induſtrious labourer can acquire in three days. In winter you muſt pity them, becauſe it is cold; in ſummer, becauſe it is hot; and in ſpring and autumn, becauſe it is lukewarm: So every ſeaſon has its pretenſion to charity; and who can refuſe giving, when told by the beggar, that what you give them is only treaſure laid up in heaven, which is to be repaid again in the other world, after it has been idly ſquandered away in this?

The encouragement of theſe people, by many, is owing to a miſtaken interpretation of ſcripture, by making the poor in ſpirit, or the modeſt and innocent, to be intended for the vicious and idle: and by this means a diſtreſſed neighbour is often neglected to feed theſe vermin.

The thieves grow chiefly out of little gin-ſhops, where they can get drunk for a penny, and in that warm ſtate are prepared for every kind of villainy and miſchief. And oftentimes the begging and the thieving poor are incorporated into one and the ſame body; their gain by begging enables them to procure that pernicious liquor, which afterwards proves productive of ſo many evils.

In a free ſtate, it is preſumed that theſe things cannot be remedied; our anceſtors thought otherwiſe, and left their poſterity, in vain, to execute the ſalutary laws which they had made; they rather choſe to put themſelves to the expence of judges, goals, carts and halters, which they find amply repaid them by the gin revenue. Thus a bait is firſt laid to make the ignorant and thoughtleſs villains, and then they are hanged out of the way for ſwallowing it. One would think by this odd ſcheme of government, that all our men in power were bred diſtillers, and were forming a ſcheme, at the expence of the lives of thouſands, to turn the whole kingdom into a gin-ſhop.

In the mean time I cannot help obſerving, how very good the generality of people are grown, and even were ſo long before the earthquake; We ſee hoſpitals riſe upon hoſpitals, until the town is half covered with them; the workhouſes, improperly ſo called, are cumber'd full of idle people; and beſides charity-ſchools, for the education of gentlemen and ladies, we pay out of the community at leaſt eight hundred thouſand pounds a year, a revenue that many German and Italian ſovereigns would think themſelves happy in, and that would, if ſaved on the one hand, and properly applied on the other, make us a great and happy people. One ſtep is now taking towards this great end; but how far it will be permitted to operate, is another conſideration. For it is now almoſt out of the queſtion, whether the poor were ever deſigned for labour, or whether they ought to do any thing but eat, drink, and ſleep on other people's induſtry; our pariſh overſeers generally taking it for granted, that all under their care reſpectively muſt be apprenticed to traders, and even ſeldom any but genteel trades; huſbandry, or any laborious occupations, being too mean for ſuch as are educated in theſe expenſive nurſeries, ſince it would be a great hardſhip on church-wardens, or overſeers, to want a jobo or a dinner, as it would be a ſenſible reflection on a charity truſtee, that he did not once a year parade through the ſtreets at the head of the gentlemen and ladies under his care. I know the clergy are a little too fond of theſe ſchemes, and aſſiduouſly propagate theſe kind of charities, without ſo much as ſuſpecting the attendant fatality: But however theſe gentlemen may be miſtaken, as being unconverſant in trade, one finds it difficult to excuſe thoſe more acquainted that way. Men muſt be allowed ſome ſhare of vanity, but it were to be wiſhed that it did not out-run the bounds of common ſenſe, and turn us all at laſt into a nation of beggars.

In concluſion, I ſhould be gladly informed, if it be true, as is by many judicious people affirmed, That the herring-fiſhery now on foot is capable, in the event, of bringing in a million a year to the common ſtock, why, as the braiding of nets is eaſily learned, all the young gentlemen and ladies, in workhouſes and charity ſchools, ſhould not be employed in that work, when they will not only thereby ſave the public the greater part of the ſaid eight hundred thouſand pounds a year, but likewiſe contribute ſomething to the bringing in the annual million.

DUBLIN, May 8.

THE children of Arklow ſchool, in the county of Wicklow, having ſent up to the committee of fifteen of the incorporated ſociety in Dublin for promoting Engliſh proteſtant ſchools in Ireland, four pieces of linnen made by them of their firſt ſpinning and weaving, each piece containing twenty-one yards, the committee were pleaſed to approve of the ſame, and to order two guineas to be diſpoſed of among the children, as the local committee ſhall think proper.——N. B. The ſame was woven by children not fourteen years of age.

Paris, June 22. Two couriers lately arrived from the marquis de Valory, the king's miniſter at Hanover, one of whom brought diſpatches about the ſtate of affairs in the empire, and the diſpoſitions of the ſeveral members of the Germanic body; the diſpatches of the other courier, turned upon the affairs of the North, and the declaration lately made to the Ruſſian miniſter at Berlin, which declaration has alſo been communicated to the Britiſh and Hanoverian miniſtry, and received by them with as chearful a countenance as could be expected.

Smyrna, April 26. The regency of Algiers has ſo well ſucceeded in perſwading the porte that Spain intends to attack that that state, that the grand signior has given them leave to raise men here for their service; and as fast as the recruits are levied, they are transported to Algiers in Swedish vessels. As they are obliged to pay understand a kind of contribution to the Agas in whose districts such levies are made, a dispute arose about it between the Bashaw of Aydin and the Aga of Pergamo; and the Bashaw, to oblige the Aga to come to terms, complain'd of him to the porte as a rebel, and refractory to the grand signior's orders. The Aga, considering that it would require much time to clear himself, and a great deal of money too, wisely resolved to have recourse to a large bribe, which had so good an effect, that the Bashaw of Aydin immediately pronounced him as faithful a subject as any in the Sultan's dominions. Before matters had been thus accommodated between them, the Bashaw came and encamped in the neighbourhood of this city with a body of 7000 men; which being found very inconvenient to the inhabitants, our principal magistrates went out to pay their respects to him, and backed their representations with presents, or bribes, as they are called in some countries. M. de Peyssonel, the French consul, also repaired to that camp on the same account; but the consuls of other nations did not think fit to do the same.

Madrid, June 18. Mr. Keene received last Saturday, a courier from London, and communicated his dispatches the same evening to the count de Carvajal. It is now pretended that that minister's negotiation is drawing towards a conclusion, and that a new treaty of commerce between the two nations will soon be made public.

LONDON.

June 28. A report having been made to the duke of Cumberland, by his order, of the truth of the petition of Hannah Snell, who went by the name of James Gray, and was a marine several years in Frazier's regiment, and went to the East-Indies in admiral Boscawen's squadron, his royal highness has been pleased to order her to be put upon the king's list, by which she will obtain a pension of thirty pounds per annum, for her life. What is remarkable in this heroine, is, that at the battle of Pondicherry she received twelve wounds, six in her right arm, and five in her left, and the other in her groin; from the last of which she extracted the ball, and herself perfected the cure, in order to prevent her sex being discovered.

June 30. We are assured that the French proceed with such spirit in restoring their marine, that they have lately built no less than thirteen men of war, within a surprizing short time, in the single port of Toulon: That they talk of vying with the English suddenly as a maritime power, and of making the French flag respected in the Mediterranean, and in the East and West-Indies: And that they will, for the future, always have a number of men of war employed to exercise the sailors, that the court may never be at a loss to man a squadron upon the least exigency. To this project the recovery of Cape Breton and it's cod-fishery, the share they are working themselves into the herring fishery on the coasts of Schetland, and the flourishing state of their West-India colonies, must greatly contribute. If it be asked, What has Great-Britain done, in the mean time, to guard against the fatal effects of this alarming progress; must not every one be obliged to answer, Nothing?

July 12. By letters from Madrid, we find they boast, that the number of manufacturers they have received from Lancashire, and other parts of England, amounts to no less than 500, most of whom are Papists; and that the few Protestants in that number are allowed the exercise of their religion in private, with a royal promise that they never shall be molested by the Inquisition.

Yesterday about 5 o' clock in the afternoon, there was the most violent storm of lightning, thunder, rain, and hail, that has been known here in the memory of man; in a short time all the streets were under water, and the hail broke the sky-lights in a great many places: The gardeners grounds round London have received incredible damage; and if it was as extensive as violent, the corn must be greatly injur'd. Several of the hailstones measured more than three inches about.

BOSTON.

September 17. We are informed by a person lately come from the French settlements on Hispaniola, that four thousand persons have been landed there from France this summer; but in so sickly a condition, that three thousand of them had died since their landing.

Since our last, several vessels are come in from Halifax, and by them we learn, that a ship was arrived there with 400 German settlers on board; as was likewise the America man of war from this place.

Thursday last, Monsieur Batter, a French physician (who, as he says, came here for religion), received 55 lashes at the public whipping post, for taking money, goods and cloathing out of a warehouse and sugar-house in this town, in an unpolite manner.——As his crimes were committed at different times, so he was sentenced to receive his stripes at three different times; but being desirous to have the job over, he petitioned that he might have them all at once, which was granted, and so took them all at one dose. If our French doctor advises his patients to such smart potions, we believe he will have but little practice here.

NEW-YORK.

September 24. By Capt. Hunter from Lisbon, we have advice, that the king of Portugal died there about eight weeks ago, which seem'd to give a great stroke to the religious there: Father Gaspard, a Jesuit, having been the sole director of affairs for many years, to the no small vexation of the nobility; the new king seems resolv'd to take the reins of government into his own hands.—— Just before Capt. Hunter sail'd, a fire broke out in one of their hospitals, which entirely destroyed the same, and a church adjoining.

ANNAPOLIS.

We hear from Baltimore County, that James Dundass, the Boatswain, who was a material Witness for Mr. John Philpot, in the Action he brought against Capt. Rendall, in England, (wherein the Jury gave very considerable Damages for Mr. Philpot), was bound over to the last County Court, on a Charge of Perjury: But the Grand Jury, upon a diligent and careful Examination of the Witnesses for the Prosecutor ONLY, finding there was no Ground for the Charge, made no Presentment; and the Boatswain was discharged, to the great Satisfaction of every IMPARTIAL Person.

Last Wednesday came on, before the Honourable the Judges of the Provincial Court, then sitting, a Cause, wherein Thomas Chase, of Baltimore County, Clerk, was Plaintiff, and James Green, of Annapolis, Printer, Defendant: The Action was brought for a (suppos'd) Libel published in the MARYLAND GAZETTE of July 28, 1747, N°. 118; and Damages were laid at Five Hundred Pounds. After a full Hearing, the Jury gave in their Verdict FOR THE DEFENDANT.

Last Week died at Lower-Marlborough Capt. John Simms, of the Ship Revolution, now lying in Patuxent; a Gentleman well respected by those who knew him.
